Lester is a loser who keeps having sexual dreams about his daughter's best friend. He is going through a mid-life crises. He starts intensive training just to look better, and also takes up taking drugs. In the end, he finds that he is happy and that the world is full of beautiful stuff.

Lester's wife is a very ambitious real estate agent. Appearance is the most important for her – she even tries to match the colours of the garden tools to her clothes. She tries to be strong, and helps herself with psychological tapes. This tape makes her want to tell her opinion to her husband.

Lester's daughter doesn't care much about her parents. Her best friend turns out to be a liar, and not her friend at all.

The family next door is even more miserable. The son takes and sells drugs, the mother is depressed and does not say a word, and that father who used to be a soldier is trying to hide his being gay by extreme aggression and lack of tolerance. They all have very sad lives.
